

ABSTRACT

In the case of a medical implant system with an implant made of a composite material in which glass fibers are embedded, to obtain information on physical states of the implant in its environment it is proposed that a sensor element which is embedded in the implant and comprises at least one of the glass fibers is coupled to a measuring device which determines a physical property of the sensor element or its environment and changing of this property.